The University of Colorado is a state institution. It exists by virtue of authority granted it under the Constitution of the State of Colorado. The University, therefore, is exempt from Federal taxes, not because it is an educational institution, but because it is a branch of the State Government as defined in the Internal Revenue Service Code. No questions have ever been raised by the Internal Revenue Service with reference to the University's exemption from Federal taxes. The legal name of the University of Colorado is the "Regents of the University of Colorado".

In compliance with IRS directives formulated because of the Tax Reform Act of 1969, the University has filed form 4653, in which it is assigned to the governmental unit category. The University has received a ruling from the Internal Revenue Service that it also qualifies as a Section 501 (c) (3) organization.
